RMGC's Kat Autenrieth Earns Global Women in Mining Recognition

Kat Autenrieth had an early love of science and outdoors, which led her to a career in geology. But she never thought she'd be in a position to influence and encourage change in the way women are treated in the mining industry through respectful conversations and awareness. Read more on page 2 about her contributions in mining which earned her this prestigious award.

RMGC's Kat Autenrieth Earns Women in Mining Award

We have an internationally recognized mining professional in our midst. Kathleen (Kat) Autenrieth was chosen as a 2022 recipient of the top 100 Global Inspirational Women in Mining award. Published every other year, the 100 Global Inspirational Women in Mining list serves as a living history of women who work in mining and highlights the wealth of female talent within the global mining industry, celebrates their above and beyond contributions to the industry, and identifies role models for future generations, as found on womeninmining.us.

Kat began her career at Kinross in 2012 as a junior exploration geologist and has worked up to her current position as Regional Director of Brownfields Exploration for North America where she is responsible for leading teams to discover and deliver ounces to create value and opportunity through extended mine life.

Kat's early interest in science and the outdoors led her to the field of geology. Her early career consisted of installing seismic stations in California, helicopter-based exploration in Alaska, and exploring for geothermal power in SW Utah. After earning her master's degree in geology at Idaho State University, she joined the Kinross team. Kat says she never expected to end up in the mining industry but is immensely proud to be a miner.

Kat was thrilled when she was asked to help create actions around Equity, Diversity, and Inclusion (EDI) at RMGC. "I found it incredibly meaningful to bring a female perspective into a traditionally male technical role, but most importantly, to do so without blame and to focus on solutions," said Kat. (con't)

"Say yes to opportunities, be uncomfortable, be adventurous. Your style of leadership can be your own; don't try to be someone you aren't. At any level you can take control of how you respond to situations and how you treat others." ~Kat

(con't from pg 2) initial EDI work and done and looks forward to sponsoring others to carry the torch forward.

Kat tried to make herself visible to girls and young women, showing them they can have a career in science, be leaders and have a family as well. As a mother of two boys, she is proud to show them women can do and be anything and still be a loving and present parent. Kat wants women to know that they belong in the mining industry. "Your presence, perspective, and voice are just as important as everyone else's," she urges women. Kat continues, "You can make important business contributions no matter what level or amount of experience you have. Be open to experiences, challenge your assumptions, and be aware of a victim vs. warrior mindset. Say yes to opportunities, be uncomfortable, be adventurous. Your style of leadership can be your own; don't try to be someone you aren't. At any level you can take control of how you respond to situations and how you treat others."

Not only has her work in EDI won her notoriety, Kat is an exemplary exploration geologist. Over her ten years at Kinross, Kat has played a vital role in numerous exploration projects, including leading exploration drilling programs in Colorado, British Columbia, Washington, and central Nevada. She brings excellent technical skills as well as strong leadership to her jobsites. At Kinross's Kettle River-Buckhorn mine in Washington, Kat and the team grew the Curlew Basin Exploration Project from the ground up, starting with identification of key targets in early years to drilling and successfully increasing the resource, culminating in project definition and approval of the underground exploration project in 2020. In 2020, Kat joined RMGC where she has been leading the exploration efforts, making a significant impact in a short period of time, including in the important area of safety. This included winning the 2021 Nevada Mining Association Safety Award in helping shift toward an open, positive, and proactive safety culture. One safety program spearheaded by Kat was the High Five safety program. This program encourages employees to reward their colleagues when they are making a difference through individual safety-themed nominations in one of five levels. The nominated employee then receives a hardhat sticker that visually demonstrates their commitment to safety and promotes continual safety best practices and the action is logged in the internal auditing system.

Overall, Kat Autenrieth exemplifies what it means to be a mining professional. She is dedicated to her field of exploration geology, her teams, and her family. She led important conversations and initiatives to make meaningful progress to ensure women feel a sense of belonging, and looks forward to continue being an advocate in this arena. It is for these many reasons that Kat was chosen as a global inspirational woman in mining.

MTC Scholarship Open

It's that time of year when soon-to-be graduating high school seniors get serious about the path they will be taking after receiving their diplomas. One great option is the MTC program. The MTC Scholarship offers students intensified training in one of five mining-related careers at Great Basin College in Elko. Recently, RMGC professionals spoke to students at Round Mountain High School, sharing this great opportunity, as seen pictured below. RMGC funds several of these scholarships each year. More trips are planned to schools in neighboring towns to share the opportunities provided by MTC and RMGC.

Employee Spotlight

This month's Employee Spotlight is Casey Stevens.

Casey works in the truck shop as a mechanic. This May marks three years at RMGC. Casey loves his job and being part of the mining community. "I love the schedule," said Casey, referring to the seven days on, seven days off crew schedule. "It allows me to live the lifestyle I've always dreamed of," he continued. In addition to the schedule, Casey loves the competitive income that a life in mining affords.

On his days off Casey likes to build off-road vehicles. He looks forward to going on off-road trips, four-wheeling in all different kinds of places.

For anyone who's thinking about applying to RMGC, Casey said the great schedule along with the pay are some great benefits to working in this mining community.

Smoky Valley 4-H News

By Sara Sweeney

Our 4-H program is growing each month. We have made some exciting changes for our kids and how our program operates. The kids have been working so hard, and we wanted to appreciate them and give them an opportunity to show the other members and their families all they have done. This year we highlighted our Vet Science project girls. They have been in this project for just under a year. The curriculum they follow is very vigorous. This last year in Vet Science the members completed Unit I.

This unit covers: Attitude and Behavior, Skin, Membranes and Intestinal Discharges, Body Temperature, Pulse and Respiration Rate, Maintaining Animal Health, Cleaning and Disinfection, Cells of the Animal Body, The Tissues of the Animal Body, The Organs and Systems of the Animal Body.

Activities in the unit: We examined different tissues under a microscope; Cracked a goose egg and examined the gosling that was complete in development; Dissected a sheep heart to examine the chambers and blood flow; Made and labeled hearts; Dissected a cow eye and learned the parts and their functions; The members shadowed a veterinarian on a farm call; Members monitored their animal's vital signs for 4 weeks, We practiced figuring out injection dosages based on animal weight.

For the Expo each member gave a presentation on a topic that they learned about during the year.

Lainey's was on the heart

Oryn's was on the vital signs

Clara's was on the lungs

Kayden's was on the eye

Dr. Seuss Reading Week at RMES February 27-March 2

Every year schools across the nation celebrate the birthday of the beloved children's author Dr. Seuss. Students get themed prizes based on Dr. Seuss characters for reading at home each day. In the classroom during this week, time is set aside daily to have students read independently. This year we would like to invite you to be a read-aloud volunteer. Please have a short children's book (it doesn't have to be a Seuss book) ready to bring with you to read. If you would like to volunteer some time to come and read to a classroom or classrooms, please call Tamra Long in the elementary office at 775-377-2236.
